Course Aims	The course aims to introduce the students to literary studies and familiarize them with canonical texts of (primarily, but not exclusively) English criticism and literary theory. The course will specifically aim at providing the students with a map of historical literary development, as well as with basic terminology and methodology required for critical reading and writing.
Course Overview	What is literature and why do we study literature (ontologically and functionally)? Literary scholarship, theory, history and criticism. Problems of editing, authorship, canon and authoritative, “original text” text? Organizing the study of literature: general, comparative, national literature. Specific issues of studying “English” literature: Anglophone, Anglistics, British, American, Scottish, Irish, Canadian, Australian, Indian? Basic terminology of (rhetorical) literary analysis: (plot, characters, perspective, tone, setting, symbol and allegory, style and figures of speech). Why theory? Why history of theory? Literary theory in relation to reality, reader and author: mimesis, enthusiasmos and techne, instructiveness and delectation (Plato, Aristotle, Horace, Sidney, Pope). New Criticism and T. S. Eliot. Russian formalism. Structuralism. Marxism. Feminism. Post-structuralism. New Historicism. Cultural Materialism. Post-Colonialism. Neopragmatism. The end (of theory)?
Grading System (including segment percentage)	attendance 10% (5+5), engagement in class activities 8% (2+6), midterm (test + essay) 36% (12+24), final exam (test + essay + essay) 46% (12+17+17).
